These TVs are quite thin in appearance and thanks to this work well on the wall or stand on the window. Samsung makes a wide selection of plasma TVs and many within the 50 to 60-inch range, and were responsible for launching the first plasma TV in 1998. Production of these TVs and plasma technology has effectively ceased since 2014, and the brand is instead focusing on LCD and LED models, but there are still some available in the new and used state. What features are on Samsung Plasma TVs? When you're following the new HDTV, the features you find most important will depend on what you use the set for. Those who are interested in games want better performance images while people who use them to view other media may be interested in HDMI and USB ports. Here are some of the features that are available on Samsung's previously released plasma kits. Input: Remote control comes standard with these kits, however check the models used to see what its still attached. Smart TV: Later plasma models are equipped with Smart features such as web applications and are built into Wi-Fi.What Condition Are the TVs In? If you're trying to fix a broken TV and need parts from another or just want to invest in a new TV for your home, there are different conditions that you can find them in depending on their quality and age, here are some of the possible conditions you will find HDTV plasma in: New: These TVs are brand new and still in the box unopened. Used: TVs that used previously, but still mostly in working order. Broken: There are many HD kits that no longer work, but people are looking for parts that allow you to fix your own device.
